Item 6. Describe the Issuer's Business, Products and Services

A. Description of the Issuer's Business Operations: Hop-on, Inc. (HPNN.PK) Since 2003, the Company has continually obtained essential patent portfolio license agreements for mobile communications, computing and home entertainment devices.

These carefully negotiated "have made" license rights permit Hop-on to have patented products made by third parties, in addition to the standard rights to "make, use and sell". The license rights to essential patents has been from Qualcomm, Motorola, InterDigital, Lucent, NEC, Alcatel, Ericsson, Philips, Siemens, Vringo and Microsoft Windows and Android platforms, give Hop-on a stronger position to manufacture, market and distribute than the likes of Samsung or Apple.

Worldwide patent law amendments have allowed patent owners a more aggressive means of preventing patent infringement than was previously unavailable, including the ability to pursue injunctive relief. While headlines abound with patent wars among Samsung, Apple and Google, patent owners are also winning judgments against the many less known manufacturers in evolving markets, such as China.

With insurmountable judgments levied against some Chinese firms, many are being forced to adjust their business practices. Working with a holder of “have made” licenses, like Hop-on, permits existing Chinese and other international firms to continue in business, forgoing the need for audits that would identify years of non-compliance and provide the evidence needed for compensatory damages.

Hop-on has intimate relationships with many Chinese manufacturers and has a history of successfully monetizing patent portfolios under Hop-on and other brands. It is now uniquely positioned to fill an ever increasing gap in the Chinese OEM and ODM mobile communications, computing and home entertainment devices marketplace

Hop-on is well known for the invention of the disposable cell phone in 2001, being named one of the "Top Ten Inventions of the Year" by Time magazine. The disposable and rechargeable phone market is now a billion dollar industry.

In diversification of the company's electronics manufacturing capabilities, its expertise was successfully focused on the electronic cigarette industry. This strategic move allows Hop-on to compete in the multibillion dollar tobacco consumer market. Hop-on, Inc.’s electronic cigarette and electric cigar products have CE markings and meets EU consumer safety and health and environmental requirements. The nicotine used in the devices is made exclusively in the United States. Over time, Hop-on has established a high-volume, low-cost distribution and retailer model for the global markets. The company partners with leading distributors throughout the United States and abroad to market and sell electronic cigarette products.

As a leading technology solutions innovator and with diverse mobile and electronics holdings, Hop-on continues to develop its real-time interactive gaming software for use with mobile and broadband connected device.
