D. Competitive business conditions, the issuer's competitive position in the industry, and methods of competition:

Widely used communication tools such as Google Hangouts, Facebook chat, Yahoo Messenger, Snapchat, WhatsApp, Viber, AIM, BlackBerry Messenger and many others do not offer end to end encryption which makes communications through them susceptible to surveillance on the provider's side. South African mobile social network Mxit and widely used Chinese instant messaging service QQ don't provide encryption at all, making them the least secure products that were tested.

Many potential competitors and some non competitors advertise some form of 'end to end encryption' for user's data. However, 'end to end encryption' is rapidly becoming the most useless term in the security lexicon. That's because actually encrypting stuff is not the toughest part. The real challenge is in distributing users' encryption keys securely, i.e., without relying on a trusted, central service. The problem here is simple: if someone can compromise such a service, then that person can convince a device to use its encryption key instead of the key of intended recipients. In this scenario -- known as a Man in the Middle (MITM) attack -- all the encryption in the world won't help.

In regards to a few of the other secure messaging applications on the market here is a brief synopsis:

Open Whisper Systems: Is an open source free app with encrypted voice (RedPhone) and text (TextSecure) applications. Red Phone uses ZRTP to establish keys, then encrypts voice data using AES. Red Phone uses a short authentication string to prevent MITM attacks. Red Phone uses only ZRTP, not SCIMP.

ChatSecure + Orbot: ChatSecure is an encrypted messenger app built for iPhone and Android. It is a free and open source app that features OTR encryption over XMPP.

Cryptocat: Cryptocat is an encrypted chatting app. Cryptocat is a free open chat app that aims to provide an open source accessible messaging environment with a transparent layer of encryption. Cryptocat uses the Off the Record Messaging (OTR) protocol to encrypt its messages.
