Defentect Signs Partnership With Motorola

NORFOLK, CT — May 11, 2026 — Defentect Group, Inc. (OTC: DFTC), a technology company specializing in advanced event detection, sensor management, and emergency response solutions, announced today that it has entered into a partnership agreement with Motorola Solutions, a California-based provider of AI control and verification systems.

The agreement brings Motorola's Avigilon and Pelco products and services into Defentect's proprietary event management and emergency notification system. The combined solution enhances real-time verification of AI-generated conclusions drawn from expert systems that use AI. The combination adds another feature set to the Defentect offering.

Defentect's systems integrate sensors used to detect security and operational events, including intrusion alerts, environmental conditions, and other threat indicators. Its previously-announced combined Kyvoo assist® and SmartBoitier® platform provides real-time visibility, analytics, and actionable intelligence across complex facilities and mission-critical infrastructure. With the addition of Avigilon and Pelco, the combined solution enables customers to identify anomalies in their security network rapidly, coordinate intelligent response workflows, and issue event-specific emergency notifications across distributed environments with the additional layer of confidence brought by the Kyvoo integration.

The Motorola partnership strengthens Defentect's position in the expanding AI, IoT, and physical security market.

James Ackerly, Chief Executive Officer of Defentect Group, Inc., said, "This agreement marks another milestone in the evolution of our platform roadmap and growth strategy. By adding Motorola Solutions' Pelco cameras and Avigilon video analytics to our DM3 system and BCS's SmartBoitier, we are delivering a broader, more intelligent and scalable solution for enterprise, industrial, and municipal customers with the added confidence of ensuring a trustworthy result."
